

Nathaniel W. Revis, R. Y. Thomson and A. J. V. Cameron, "Lactate Dehydrogenase Isoenzymes in the Human Hypertrophic Heart", Cardiovascular Research, Volume 11 Issue 2, Pages 172-176, 1977

Lactate Dehydrogenase Isoenzymes in the Human Hypertrophic Heart

1. N. W. REVIS¹,
 2. R. Y. THOMSON and
 3. A. J. V. CAMERON
- + Author Affiliations

¹ Address for correspondence and reprints: N. W. Revis, University of Tennessee Biomedical Graduate School, Biology Division, PO Box Y, Oak Ridge, Tennessee 37830, USA.

SUMMARY

Lactate dehydrogenase isoenzymes have been measured in human hearts at autopsy. As compared with normal hearts, hypertrophic hearts and ischaemic hypertrophic hearts showed a shift in the isoenzyme distribution. This shift appeared to be more closely associated with an increase in the relative proportion of fibrous tissue than with changes in the myocardial cells.

Copyright © 1977, European Society of Cardiology

Articles citing this article

Myocardial lactate dehydrogenase patterns in volume or pressure overloaded left ventricles Eur J Heart Fail (2002) 4(5): 587-591